Energy Law puts a debate that cannot be postponed any longer on the table of Law Sciences, about the judicialization of social interactions concerning the use of energy resources. Energy, Environment, Development and Citizenship are inextricably linked themes!

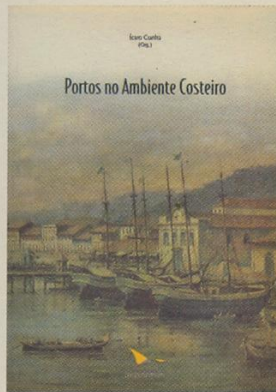

The change in the international geopolitics brought about by the new oil discoveries in the Southern cone of the American continent, Bolivia's leading role in hydrocarbons and natural gas, and the Brazilian biofuels are factors that affect International Law (regardless of its old public-private dichotomy). They also affect the domestic Law of the States involved and, like a cascade effect, the law created within Mercosul, which somehow includes all the sub-regional players. The societies are interrelated in a network and hence so are their legal systems!
